Summer Sports!

Norway may have a reputation for dominating the competition in Winter Olympic Games but there are plenty of summer sports that keep Norwegians active all year round. In fact, 9 out of 10 kids in Norway participate in one or more sports, and all children are encouraged to stay active no matter what season it is. Here are some warm-weather sports and athletes that are popular in Norway today:

Soccer: Ada Hegerberg and Erling Braut Haaland are both considered among the best soccer players in the world. In addition to playing for Team Norway in international competitions, Ada plays for the Olympique Lyonnais club in France and Erling plays for Manchester City in England.

Tennis: 2022 has been a banner year for Norwegian tennis players. Casper Ruud became the first Norwegian to make the finals of the men's tournament at the French Open and Norway's top-ranked female player, Ulrikke Eikeri, played mixed doubles in the finals.

Handball: While handball might not be as big in North America, it is one of the most popular sports in Norway. The Norwegian women's national team won the gold at his year's world championship and also took home the bronze medal at the 2021 Tokyo Olympics.

SUMMER SCAVENGER HUNT

In Norway, outdoor life is really important. In fact, Norwegians even have a term for their love of the outdoors: friluftsliv. It's a commitment to celebrating nature and time outside, regardless of age, condition, or weather. We encourage you to connect with the outdoors this summer. What better way to do so than with a fun summer scavenger hunt!

Foraging Fun

Have you ever been on a hike and picked some brilliant berries or helped gather a bunch of mushrooms? There's a name for that! Sanking (foraging) is an activity that many Norwegians enjoy. It means collecting plants from the wild outdoors.

Here are a few things that Norwegians like to forage:

Berries

Multer These unique berries kind of look like a golden-sunset raspberry. Also known as cloudberry, or Arctic gold, these berries are not planted- you can really only find them in the wild. Shhh—some people like to keep their multer picking spots a secret!

Blåbær (blueberries)

Jordbær (strawberries)

Bringebær (raspberries)

Tyttebær (lingonberries – tart, round red berries, flavored a bit like cranberries)

Mushrooms

The forest produces a bounty of edible mushrooms that you can search for på sopptur (on a mushroom hunt). Mushrooms are delicious in soups, rice dishes, omelets and more.

Three Norwegian favorites according to Gone71.com:

Steinsopp (porcini)

Kantarell (chanterelle)

Traktkantarell (yellowfoot)

Other items you can forage are wild herbs and greens. Find out more about foraging at your local library or nature center.

Remember: Always check with an adult before tasting any of your forest finds!

EGG CARTON MUSHROOM CRAFT

Make some cute mushrooms for a diorama, fairy garden or for your dolls or action figures to play with. This craft uses recyclable materials and is fun and easy for young kids.

What you'll need:

- Clean Cardboard Egg Cartons
- Acrylic Paints in Red and White
- Hot Glue Gun
- Scissors
- Faux Grass (optional)

Steps:

1. Make sure the cartons you use are clean. Washing them may not be an option, but you can wipe them down with a good disinfectant or even vinegar.
2. Using a pair of scissors, cut out the "cup" portion of the egg carton to make the mushroom's head. Cut out as many as you need and trim the edges to keep them neat.
3. Flatten each mushroom cup slightly, so that they look uneven, like real mushrooms.
4. Bring out the paints! You can make a classic red design, or use any fun color you have on hand.
5. Use white paint to make dots on the mushroom heads to add some interest.
6. Now that the mushroom heads are ready, it's time for the stems. Cut out the side of the carton into long strips. Roll up a strip to make it look like the stem. No problem if it isn't neat – the more rugged, the more natural it'll look.
7. Now all you need to do is attach the stems to the bottom of the mushroom heads with glue and ta-da – your mushrooms are ready! If you've got some faux grass, place the mushrooms on it for an adorable little scene!

Instructions:

1. Measure cream, sugar, vanilla extract/sugar and salt into a large mixing bowl.

3. Using a spoon, fold in (lightly mix by hand) the cloudberry jam.
4. Divide the dessert between four small serving dishes.
